What Do Magnets Do?
 Magnets have an invisible force that pulls (attracts) some metals from a distance. The force of magnets is strongest at their ends, or poles. Each magnet has a north pole and a south pole. When two different poles meet, they attract each other. When two of the same poles meet, they repel each other.

What Other Force Attracts Objects?
 Rub a balloon on a wool sweater and hold the balloon above your hair. What happens? The balloon pulls, or attracts, your hair! When some objects rub together, they become charged with static electricity. Static electricity is an invisible force. You can't see this force, but you can see its effects on objects.

Think!
 1 When do you see static electricity?
 2 Predict how the compass needle will move when it comes close to the magnet.
